To Whom it May Concern:

Cooper Rothe has been one of the most reliable players I have coached in my 15 years of high school and professional indoor football coaching career. He has a natural ability to make plays within a given scheme with ease. His overall intelligence and understanding of the entire scheme allows him to excel on the field.

Off the field Cooper is a reliable student and character leader. He has never shown anything other than respect to his family, teachers, coaches and teammates. He has worked himself into a definite DII football player. His ability has rivaled several players who I have sent to division two and both became all – Americans for their respective teams at that level. I do believe however that If Cooper reaches his full potential he could be a smaller D1 kid. I base this on the pro athletes that I have worked with in the indoor game who have come from big school such as Kansas State, Ole Miss, Auburn and many others.

He has natural feet, good hips, and is very fluid in his motion in both his man to man cover and zone drops. One of his biggest attributes is his leadership. He is not going to be a rah-rah guy, instead he is a leader by example and action. That being said his weakness might be that he is at times too quiet. I have seen times where his teammates look to him to rally the troops and his shy personality takes over. If Cooper can break through in that area, which is minor, he will be the ultimate athlete in my opinion.

With Cooper you are going to get a hard-working, no nonsense, lead by example, amazing character and most importantly student athlete.

Sincerely,
